

December's hike was due to someone else once again. Marcie decided to join me on one of my hikes and we took Archer with us. It was an opportunity to enjoy a hike that was half trail half city streets – and connect Mohawk university to university plaza. Another piece accomplished and Hamilton closer to being hiked.

Starting out! Same place as with Denise, Yoav and Jakey. But we're going the other way!

The trail had a lovely early-winter appearance which I quite enjoyed.

Archer, whatever that is, don't eat it! It is NOT good for you.

As we continue on the trail, it gets more city-like until we switch entirely.

Eventually we ended up on the street. Not as nice as the trail but still nice! Luckily, Hamilton streets are quite pretty. This area is more university than suburban.

We were on this very British sounding name that I kept misreading. Blinky? Blinkley? Binky? Blankey? Brinkley? You see. It just begs to be played with! I'm very pleased that Binkley is on the trail.

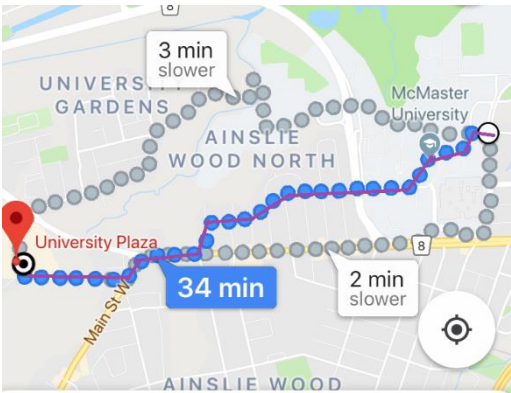

You know you're almost on campus when there's many bikes and weird abstract sculptures! I do not know why universities like weird abstract sculptures. But they do!

Here we are at our destination! It sure looks different in the daylight.

Thanks for walking with me, Marcie!

Maps are cool! I have now walked 36 kilometers.

34 min (2.7 km) Mostly flat.
